STATINTL

Nomination of [REDACTED]

for the Younger Federal Lawyer Award for 1976

STATINTL

The Central Intelligence Agency is nominating [REDACTED] an Assistant General Counsel in the Office of General Counsel, for the Younger Federal Lawyer

STATINTL Award. [REDACTED]

serving there as a JAG officer until June 1974 when he came to the Central Intelligence Agency, totaling eight years in the service of the United States Government.

STATINTL [REDACTED] address is: Office of General Counsel, Central Intelligence Agency, Washington, D. C. 20505.

STATINTL [REDACTED] came to the CIA at a time when the Agency was in a very turbulent period which placed heavy demands on the Office of General Counsel. Many of these

STATINTL matters presented new and novel legal questions. [REDACTED] was immediately assigned cases and problems of a highly complex nature. Because of the demands

STATINTL on the Office of General Counsel, [REDACTED] underwent no formal training with respect to the Agency and intelligence generally. It is a mark of [REDACTED] STATINTL abilities that he was able to absorb and fully appreciate not only the facts and characteristics of the Agency, but also the nuances of intelligence. He was off and running when he came into the Office and has pulled a full load since then.

His Fitness Reports have been "Outstanding" and he was recently awarded a Quality

Step Increase as authorized by law and regulations for sustained outstanding performance.

STATINTL [REDACTED] has been assigned a significant number of litigation matters which has required substantive interplay with the Department of Justice. Most of these cases are highly complicated. There have been numerous court-ordered interrogatories and discovery orders for production of documents. Producing documents and information under such court orders poses significant difficulties for CIA. Many of the documents contain highly classified information and accommodation must be reached between the Agency's legitimate need to preserve certain sensitive information from unauthorized disclosure and yet meet the requests of the plaintiffs consistent with court determinations. To reach these accommodations [ ] STATINTL necessarily negotiated with those officers of the Agency responsible for the documents and information and subsequently negotiated with the Department of Justice to assure them that our views of what were required by the court orders were rational and complete. In this relationship [ ] necessarily took STATINTL the role, in effect, of educating the Department of Justice lawyers to the unique aspects of intelligence as reflected in the documents in question. His ability to interpret the court orders in such a manner as to meet the requirements therein, and at the same time preserve the sanctity of extremely sensitive information, is truly an outstanding feat.

Approximately one year ago the Agency and the Department of Justice were involved jointly in attempting to resolve the legal aspects of a highly sensitive STATINTL intelligence activity of direct concern to the President. [ ] was the Agency legal representative in this matter and in the course of reviewing it he developed an original legal theory which would overcome serious problems of legality raised by the Department of Justice. His position was controversial, but the matter was of such importance that the Attorney General agreed that it was appropriate for the Director to address himself to the President on the subject. [ ] STATINTL participated in the preparation of a memorandum from the Director to the President, expressing in detailed, but concise, form the Agency's view. The paper was presented to the President the day after the Director met with the Attorney General. The White House determined it would seek additional views and, since this matter involved intelligence activities and international law matters, the views of the Department of State were sought. The lawyers for the Department of State sought expanded views by the Agency on its view of the law. [ ] STATINTL fully participated in expounding his view of the law. The Department of State expressed its view in writing, agreeing with the position of the CIA. Thereafter, the Attorney General concurred in the State Department/CIA view, and the President acted on the matter in accord with that view. As a result it has been possible to carry out intelligence activities of the utmost importance to the national security with confidence that the law of the United States is being observed in all respects. Without STATINTL [ ] innovative and expert work this intelligence activity would have been impeded with serious harm to the interests of the United States.

STATINTL [ ] has had an extremely active role with respect to the congressional investigations, as well as the Rockefeller Commission investigation, of the CIA. From the standpoint of many employees and former employees of the Agency, there was deep concern by Agency management and by the individuals themselves with respect to their possible criminal jeopardy. Clearly, Agency lawyers could not act as legal advisers to individuals in this respect. Furthermore, most of the employees could ill afford retaining personal counsel. The Agency on the other hand felt a deep responsibility since the matters concerning which they were to be questioned were directed of them in the past by the Agency itself. It was determined that the Agency would attempt to secure pro bono counsel for each individual who wished to have counsel. [ ] personally handled the STATINTL bringing together of outside counsel on a pro bono basis for each individual who so desired. More than fifty persons were represented by counsel on this basis. It is a tribute to the legal profession in the area that it responded so willingly. [ ] fulfilled this task in an outstanding professional STATINTL manner, not only accomplishing what was the responsibility of Agency management, but at the same time fulfilling the deeply felt needs of these individuals. In other situations where the question of possible jeopardy was not at issue, [ ] personally participated in many of the interviews of Agency employees STATINTL and former Agency employees, guiding them with respect to the agreements previously reached between the investigating groups and the Agency on areas of extreme sensitivity which were not to be covered in such interviews. Here again, [ ] STATINTL handled in a thoroughly professional way a number of difficult situations which required very delicate handling.

During this period there have been filed in the Federal Courts some 30 to 35 civil complaints of various types naming numerous Agency employees and former Agency employees as defendants. In many cases individuals were named not only in their official capacity, but personally. The subject of some of these complaints concerned allegations the subjects of which were simultaneously undergoing criminal investigation by the Department of Justice. Obviously this posed a dilemma to the Department of Justice in undertaking to represent the Agency employees and former Agency employees in these civil suits which would be their normal practice. The Agency was informed by the Attorney General in certain of these cases that the Department of Justice would not undertake representation.

[ ] was involved in many of these cases and participated in the legal STATINTL research leading up to a request that the Attorney General reconsider his position, or that in lieu of the Department of Justice representing these individuals, the Department of Justice provide private counsel retained by the Department of Justice. This request to the Attorney General resulted in the Department of Justice retaining counsel to represent these individuals with the funds being supplied by the Department of Justice. Again, [ ] made a significant STATINTL contribution in accomplishing what we believed to be the responsibility of the United States Government.

The above are illustrations of the types and significance of the legal matters that [ ] has handled since June 1974. His entire professional STATINTL responsibilities have been so truly outstanding that in this short period of time he has made a real mark in the Office of General Counsel which few, if any,

STATINTL will exceed. In short, [ ] has made a massive contribution to the Central Intelligence Agency and in turn to the Federal Government.

A. Professional Achievements. A nominee may be qualified by outstanding legal ability and performance over a sustained period, or because of a specific accomplishment for which the nominee is primarily responsible. Whether the achievements are of a general or specific nature, they should have resulted in a significant benefit to the Federal Government and the legal profession and constituted a contribution to the development of public law.

B. Professional and Community Responsibilities. A nominee may be qualified because of a significant contribution to the legal profession and or community not in a Government position.

 IV. Eligibility Requirements

Any Civilian or military attorney who is employed by the United States Government shall be eligible to receive an Award except that:

A. No nominee will be considered who has reached or will reach the age of 36 before September 8, 1976;

B. No nominee will be considered who at the time the nomination is made, has served with the Government as an attorney less than three continuous years;

C. No nominee will be considered for an Award if the services constituting the primary basis for nomination were required because of a political appointment, and the nominee's retention in the appointed position is based on political consideration;

D. All National Officers of the Council on Younger Lawyers are ineligible to receive an Award.

V. Processing and Selection of Nominations

Nominations must be received by the Awards Committee on or before June 11, 1976. On that date, all nominations received by the Awards Committee will be forwarded to each member of the Panel of Judges for evaluation and selection.

The manner of selection will be as follows: Each judge will select in order of preference the names of the three, four or five outstanding nominees and will submit such selections to the Awards Committee. Thereafter, the Committee will determine the Award recipients upon a basis of total cumulative points; i.e., five points for the first choice selection, four points for a second choice selection, and so forth.

Each Award will be in the form of a scroll, containing an appropriate citation. The Awards will be presented at the 1976 Annual Convention of the Federal Bar Association during September, 1976 in Washington, D.C. At that time, both the distinguished judges and the Award recipients will be honored. It is thus hoped that Award recipients will be able to attend the Convention.

VI. Manner of Submission of Nominations

D. The nomination, excluding the covering letter, shall not exceed five pages in length. Covering letters will not be transmitted to the panel of Judges. NO NOMINATION WHICH EXCEEDS FIVE DOUBLE SPACED, 8 1/2" x 11" PAGES WILL BE TRANSMITTED FOR CONSIDERATION BY THE JUDGES.

E. No communication with the Judges regarding a nominee shall be allowed, except through the Younger Federal Lawyer Award's Committee.

F. Nominations will require the signatures of any three Federal attorneys or officials (civilian or military). Nominators' signatures and their official addresses shall be placed on the last page of the nomination.
